Improved access to quality prostate cancer care can be achieved through the implementation of the National Cancer Control Programme. To improve prostate cancer services and outcomes in Malaysia through setting up a national network of regional and referral prostate cancer care centres. A four-month study was carried out from October 2014 until January 2015 to establish a network of seven centers for urological cancer care, a task force and support systems in the seven states/territories. These centers will provide services to men with prostate cancer. The seven-state prostate cancer network consists of 10 centers of urology and five regional coordinating centers. An early-diagnosis team (at each site) is responsible for the provision of prostate cancer services. These team members provide services through routine investigations, such as, serum prostate-specific antigen and radiology, which are performed at each site. The results of the prostate cancer-specific prostate-specific antigen test for a patient at the peripheral site are reported and verified by the coordinating centre for the state/territory where the patient resides. Specialized services are delivered at the coordinating centers, through the GUM physicians, radiologists and urologists, and include robotic prostatectomy and brachytherapy. (PDF) Service Manual - #1 Einhell TC-SB 200/1POTENTIAL CLOSURE: The Pennsylvania turnpike is set to close as Governor Wolf thinks the roads could be used by protesters A spokeswoman for the Pennsylvania Turnpike said on Tuesday that the turnpike would not reopen in the midst of the high-profile protests over the disputed removal of four Confederate statues. "Because our system is already experiencing extreme demand, the likelihood of a storm closing the turnpike on short notice is nearly impossible," said the spokeswoman, Kristina Gillespie. "Therefore, the administration is not contemplating a reopening of the turnpike until the storm has passed." Gillespie said that the administration would have to consider reopening the turnpike as soon as the weather improves if the demands placed on its system by the protests were not met. She emphasized that the state had already done everything possible to keep open as much as possible of its road network. Gillespie did not say when or if that time would come. The protests began last Wednesday when a group of neo-Nazis and white supremacists took to the streets of Charlottesville, Va., to protest the removal of a Confederate monument by private citizens. A white supremacist and an anti-fascist activist were killed and more than 20 others were injured before police declared the rally an unlawful assembly.

The Virginia and state legislatures have approved a package of bills that would remove any memorial to the Confederacy, a slaveholding and secessionist movement that broke apart the United States after the Civil War. The governors of Maryland, Ohio, Kentucky and elsewhere issued similar orders for all public memorials to be removed. In response to the violence, hundreds of local citizens have publicly vowed to protect the monuments, often decrying any idea that the statues represent a racist history or a time of slavery. For his part, Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Wolf said he supported the removal of the Confederate statues from Memorial Day to Labor Day. While he said he did not approve of the violence in Charlottesville, his administration has already taken steps to move forward with the removal of the statues. But in the aftermath, the Monumental Task Force that is leading the drive to take down the statues has received calls for a state of emergency. Major roads in the state, including the turnpike, are being used to shuttle protesters and others to rallies in
